

Instructions and Tips for Christmas Bird Counters

Each participant is a member of a "Count party" that the "Count Compiler" assigned to "cover" one or more "Areas" of the "Count Circle".

Each party will submit one official paper "Check-list" at the end of the day, mailed or other means.

Let one person in the party hold and edit the paper Check-list (a clipboard is helpful); feel free to take turns as the day progresses.

Page 1 of the Check-list provides space for running tallies of the most common birds.

A party works as a single unit staying within hearing range of each other, so that none of the following information is multiplied by the number of participants. (If participants separate, it's OK to include numbers or even species seen only by some people so long as effort statistics are added too.)

Each party shall keep track of the following performed while looking for birds:

- * Numbers of birds of each species
- * Lengthy details (try to get multiple photos) for any rare bird (the "!!!" or "!!!!" on page 2 of the Check-list.

- * Daylight Hours Walked
- * Daylight Miles Walked
- * Daylight Hours Driven
- * Daylight Miles Driven
- * Daylight Hours on Water
- * Daylight Miles on Water

- * Any of the above at Night
- Earlier than 1/2 hr before sunrise
Later than 1/2 hr after sunset

Focus on FINDING birds, rather than updating the check-list TOO often. Call out birds to the Check-list person, but DON'T expect that person to write every single Red-bellied Woodpecker on the spot. Updates can be done about once every 15-30 minutes, depending on people's memories.

Visit many places. Be patient, give a brushy patch 5 or 10 minutes, birds hide but are attracted to "pishing" and squeaking. Audio playback can be helpful if done prudently. Birds in the water aren't always up, allow a few minutes for any to surface before moving on. Listen for faint call notes. Look for oddities among flocks.

Because the Count is a scientific endeavor, the compiler may have to reject the ID of one or more rare birds for one reason or another. Observers may be asked to clarify something in a documentation form.

Do not trespass and don't look into people's windows with binoculars. When asked what you're doing, politely explain that you are counting birds for the annual Audubon Christmas Bird Count.

Be careful. Don't park close to the edge of public streets. Be a safe pedestrian. Use emergency flashers if necessary. Don't make unexpected stops while driving. Just be careful.

Check for ticks all over at the end of the day. Consider wearing repellent, but don't spray while your standing near others.
